This was a very special development, because the Irish population was still not living in wealth, but they did not hesitate to spend a lot of money for high quality tea. Since the early s the population of Ireland has rapidly been shedding many of the characteristics that made it unique for over a century. Finally, to what extent did Irish living standard altered in the decades after the Great Famine?

Before the Great Famine ofthe population of Ireland underwent a great demographic rise due to precocious marriage, a high birth-rate, and declining mortality. As abovementioned, especially the large number of newly opened up shops all over the country supported the upgrade of Irish life conditions and the enlargement of the variety of goods.
