Because they restrict themselves to the instruments developed in logic and grammar, even when these are inadequate for capturing pragmatic relations – as, for example, in syntactic explanations of the performative character of speech acts; 24 or c. To the condemnation of a wrong corresponds the admiration we feel for a good act. For reasons to be sound and for them to be merely considered sound are not the same thing, whether we are dealing with reasons for asserting facts, for recommending norms and values, or for expressing desires and feelings.

I empha- sized at the start that I am restricting my analysis to paradigmatic cases of linguistically explicit action that is oriented to reaching understanding. Another example is the way in which the discussion of ethics of responsibility and ethics of conviction and the expanded role of utilitarian considerations within universalist ethics have brought the calculation of consequences and the interpretation of needs into play and these are perspectives situated rather in the domains of the cognitive and the expressive.
