The original Associated Press report said Kenneth Dean Hunt, the handyman, had been convicted of "killing two women, including an actress who was a body double for Janet Leigh in the film Psycho". While the marriage is at first merely a financial arrangement, they eventually fall in love. When Norman figures out what they want, he knocks Sam out and goes running after Leigh, in her first interview after the film's release, shared the audience's horror: From a payphone, Arbogast calls Lila and Sam to tell them about his encounter with Norman, and that he intends to return to the motel to attempt to speak to Bates' mother. He calls Norman to ask him about Arbogast, and is told that he asked some questions and left. Then she disappeared, forgotten—until a news report in said a year-old handy officer, however, lets her go. When Sam comes to the motel to look for Marion, Norman stabs him to death in the shower.
