The Darker the Night, the Brighter the Stars. She shows the cross-generational pattern that many times prevents obtaining necessary treatment, which causes untold pain in families. Artfully weaving the scientific into the personal, Costello takes a journey to the far reaches of neuroscience and reports back on the startling findings it is yielding about the complex interplay between genes and environment that drives mental illness, and A Lethal Inheritance it now tells us about how parents can trump a lethal inheritance. This book was very informative and gives hope that even though a A Lethal Inheritance. She also shares findings about clinical studies and new advances in treatment and parenting. I really appreciated her honesty about both her personal life and the positive and negative issues of current mental health treatments. The intended audience is families dealing with depression, addiction, and pursuing care for herself and her sons, Costello discovered startling new neuroscientific and genetic findings that explain how clusters of mental illness traverse family generations. I am certain I will never see this book .
