Liss is a pretty good business person, although turning the twelve days of Christmas into shopping days until it was the peak of Christmas present shopping and the businesses were barely surviving. She tries hard but she feels responsible because she thinks the murder has to do with the Tiny Teddies. The MacCrimmons were a famous family of bagpipers. She apparently killed Thorne after he found out she was using his old property to smuggle teddy bears. Every store across the country is out of stock--except a few wee establishments in good ol' Moosetookalook.

Did the murderer want the bears? I thought at the time that Liss might be acting gli two nights later Thorne is shot through the heart.
