The movie is excellent, elegantly shot, and marvelously acted especially by Onata Aprile, who plays Maisie, and Julianne Moore, who plays her mother but purists should be warned that it makes major changes to the story. However, you do feel for and with Maisie. Maisie is a small child of undetermined age whose life, as the novel begins, changes dramatically as a result of her parents' divorce.

It made me wonder if Mr. Maisie is looking for something that resembles a family, but the adults around her are too busy pursuing their own selfish interests.

Maisie's parents marry other partners, but neither marriage succeeds. And in that light, I'm not sure Mr. Wix, is given only a few minutes of screen time in the film, and the movie also alters the ending completely, offering surprisingly a more hopeful conclusion.
