He also served as an Italian admiral during World War I. Rasmussen spent his early years in Greenland among the Kalaallit where he learned to speak Kalaallisut, hunt, drive dog sleds and live in harsh Arctic conditions. Member feedback about Constitutional Council France:

He discovered various fjords and unknown littorals, which he was authorized to explore. The city is home to almost as many sled-dogs as people. He was also granted the Medal of the Bear, a high distinction of the Greenlandic government, as well as many other foreign distinctions such as the Mungo Park Medal, awarded to him in 1907 by The Royal Scottish Geographical Society. However, his popularity suffered from the economic downturn that followed the energy crisis, marking the end of the "thirty glorious years" after World War II.
