Show more Show. Thus, to show the different conceptual approach to vulnerability in the process of human living and its contributions to the process of nursing care, the objective of the present study was to assess the article that approach the theme of vulnerability in health and nursing, published in national and international journals. Development and evaluation of healthcare quality measures and measurement. These practices are expected to be incorporated by individuals themselves to reduce the risks that threaten their health. Clinically she worked as a District Nurse. Second, process evaluation allows quality improvement efforts to examine health care problems experienced by vulnerable populations differ from those encountered by others in the health care system either by their nature or in the frequency with which such problems are encountered and will require a different set of measures to evaluate the quality of care they receive.
